Arnau Vergés was asked to create a multi-purpose outbuilding next to a 17th-century farmhouse in La Vall d'en Bas, a municipality in eastern Spain, as part of a renovation and extension project called Farm Surroundings.

The architect had already renovated the main property to provide room for the fourth generation of the farm's owners, the Carrera family, in 2011.

Old animal shelters and sheds were cleared from the site to make way for the new concrete and timber-clad structure, which provides storage for farm machinery, a boiler room, a workshop and a changing area for farm workers.

The family's herds of Aberdeen Angus cattle graze on rolling hills around the property, and the architect envisioned the garage's green roof as an extension of this landscape.

"By analysing the structures that are to be found around the country house, some still standing and others already blurred, we laid out an intervention in the farmland based on demolishing, strengthening, and building new parts," explained Vergés.

"This project takes place in the transition strip between the country house and the animals; between the farm and the crops," he added.
